About the Toolkit

During the summer, low-income students lose ground compared to their wealthier peers. But summer can also be a time to help level the playing field through high-quality, summer learning programs that research shows produce measurable benefits in math, reading and social and emotional learning.

With more than 50, evidence-based tools and resources—drawn from the work of five urban school districts and their partners, and aligned with research from RAND—the Summer Learning Toolkit helps educators deliver programs that make a real difference.

Watch the video to learn more.

Staffing & Professional Development

Determining staffing needs and hiring selectively
Providing sufficient training and professional development
Additional Resources

A strong body of education research shows that the quality of teaching has the largest impact of any school feature on student outcomes. The same holds true for summer programs. Students benefit the most from experienced and capable instructors who are well prepared for their roles. RAND found that teachers with relevant content knowledge and grade-level experience were associated with better student outcomes in math and reading.

A successful summer program requires a thoughtful approach to recruiting, hiring and training all staff. Because some union regulations prioritize seniority in their hiring by default, districts may want to work with their union to enable selective hiring that suits the specific climate, culture and goals of the summer program. For enrichment providers, districts may offer professional development on classroom management or instructional strategies to complement their subject-matter expertise. For all staff, opportunities to practice delivering the curriculum during staff training are essential for successful implementation during the program.

Example Milestones for Staffing and Professional Development

Determining staffing needs and hiring selectively

Staffing your summer program is a big job. Besides teachers, you likely need support staff, site leaders and a variety of specialists. Determine staffing needs in the fall and begin recruitment in early winter.

...and continues with samples of and guidance on staffing models and job descriptions.

- Be realistic: Use historic no-show and attendance rates, not enrollment figures, to accurately project the number of staff needed for the summer program.
- Cover your bases: Develop a site staffing model to ensure that critical functions related to attendance, professional development, behavior management, enrichment, instruction, meals and transitions are covered.
- Aim high: Develop selective hiring procedures with the union to ensure you can hire the most qualified teachers.

Providing sufficient training and professional development

Professional development is the link to ensuring that program goals and plans translate into positive experiences for youth and staff and ultimately benefit students.

It also includes samples and tip sheets related to high-quality professional development.

- Use time wisely: Provide all staff with a handbook of key policies, contacts and schedules to avoid discussing logistics that can be covered in writing.
- Provide context: Talk about the families and students being served to underscore why the summer experience and program elements are important.
- Share the experience: Include all instructional support staff in curriculum training and practice sessions with teachers.
- Be consistent: Model appropriate behavior-management strategies to ensure a unified approach throughout the program day.
