Call and response: Afterschool programs stepping up during the pandemic

From the outset of the pandemic, afterschool programs have adapted and expanded their services to best meet the needs of the children and families they serve. In Portland, community organizations, such as at Breakwater School and Portland Community Squash, worked in partnership with Portland Public Schools to provide meals to families, delivered by busses. With technology provided by the school district, community partners set up virtual learning hubs, where students could learn—having access to the internet, academic support, and enrichment activities.

A 2021 national survey of afterschool providers finds programs continue to provide:

Academic enrichment	94%
Time to interact with peers	86%
Physical activity	81%
Snacks or meals	77%
Check-ins with student and families	32%

21st Century Community Learning Centers

21st Century Community Learning Centers (21st CCLC) are local before-school, afterschool, and summer learning programs that serve students attending high-poverty, low-performing schools, engaging students in hands-on learning activities aimed at supporting their academic growth. They provide a variety of enrichment activities to complement school-day learning and offer educational and support services to the families of participating children.

In Maine, 5,340 children in 58 communities take part in a Community Learning Center.

21st CCLC grants are the only dedicated federal funding source that support local communities' afterschool and summer programs. Demand for programs is so great in Maine that 3 out of every 8 applications cannot be funded.

The 2020 Department of Education annual performance report of 21st CCLC found that among regular participants:

Nearly half improved their math (48%) and English grades (48%)

69% improved homework completion and class participation

62% improved their behavior
