21st Century Community Learning Grants in Alabama

Program Description
The Helping Hand 21st Century Community Learning Center is a joint program developed by the Alabama Cooperative Extension System, Central Elementary and the Tuscaloosa City Board of Education.
The Southern Normal 21st Century Community Learning Center for student success of Alabama State University is a year round enrichment program for middle school students attending Brewton Middle School.
The Albama Avenue Learning Center is established to provide After School, Extended Year, and community learning opportunities for the students and residents of the Albertville community.
The Albertville Community Learning Center offers academic tutoring and instruction and artistic and cultural enrichment opportunities to students and their families after school and during the summer.
The 21st Century Community Learning Centers will provide additional support to students in the Anniston City Schools System in the areas of Math and Science.
Project focused on an academic component especially reading, incorporating physical activity opportunities and enrichment opportunities.
Our program will focus on providing enrichment activities that will enhance our academic requirements. One significant change encountered, we have hired one grant Site Supervisor instead of having 2 part-time Supervisors as we had originally planned.
Our program addresses the need for exposure to the Arts as well as academic remediation. We are working in collaboration with University of South Alabama to provide hands on contact with art, music, and drama.
21st Century Community Learning Center Project Leap, located at Foley Middle School served sixth, seventh and eighth graders in school year 2003-2004. We have a total enrollment of 56 students.
The project is located in rural south Alabama with a school population of 900 students. The program is designed to help students with homework in science, math, social studies, english and reading.
